Calendar Help - Microsoft Internet Explorer
File Edit View Favorites Tools Help
Welcome to Calendar Help
Please remember that this document is called up in a new frame, so if you are using a newer browser, you'll find the Calendar program window behind this one. Resize this window to suit you and close when finished.
The system serves as a messaging service. On the day of each entry, one has the option of receiving a message containing the entry, sent to the Email address supplied to Calendar. This alert option is selected on the message update screen.
Calendar is best viewed at 800x600 pixels. Make sure the window is wide enough to view the entire month. Also remember that you can use the Netscape GO list to navigate backwards or jump to another page in Calendar.
The current day on the Calendar Month is indicated in red. If the month currently being displayed does not contain today's date, there will not be a red date.
If a day has an personal entry for the current user, it is indicated on the Calendar Month with a blue ball next to the number. Group entries are only viewable in Calendar Week.
The End on Calendar Day is offered to those who want closure although, of course, it is not required.
The application makes use of the Java option to describe any anchor or link. When the mouse is over a hyperlinked word or digit, look at the bottom of the browser for a message about that link.
This has only been tested with Netscape 2 with modest results, and with Netscape 3. For instance, in Calendar Week, the discussion is set up to be shown at the bottom of the browser, but this does not show up in Netscape 2.
